Library Search: doing a topic search and finding the best results.
[female narrator]
A topic search in LibrarySearch can often get a lot of results.
We’d like to show you how to narrow down your results to find the most relevant books, articles and more.
Always remember to log in to LibrarySearch first.
Here I search for information on ‘business ethics’ and found almost 300,000 results! That is too many. How do I choose the best ones?
I will narrow down the results to get the most relevant ones. I only want information on ‘business ethics’ and ‘corporate social responsibility’.
I don’t see ‘corporate social responsibility’ under the list of subjects. So, I’ll click on ‘more options’. Here it is! I’ll tick the relevant options.
Next, I can choose what kind of material I would like. For example, peer-reviewed scholarly articles, news items, books or audio-visual materials like videos.
I only want books, so I’ll choose that.
I’ll select the ‘Full-text Online’ option to show only e-books.
I need recent information. I can refine my results by publication date.
I’ll use the date slider to show the books from the last five years.
For more help, see the other LibrarySearch videos, or Ask a Librarian Online by phone or at your closest Library.
